Calculus (from Latin calculus, literally 'small pebble', used for counting and calculations, as on an abacus) is the mathematical study of continuous change, in the same way that geometry is the study of shape and algebra is the study of generalizations of arithmetic operations.. It has two major branches, differential calculus (concerning instantaneous rates of change and slopes of curves ...

Let  $r(t)$  be a curve in Euclidean space, representing the position vector of the particle as a function of time. The Frenet-Serret formulas apply to curves which are non-degenerate, which roughly means that they have nonzero curvature. More formally, in this situation the velocity vector  $\dot{r}(t)$  and the acceleration vector  $\ddot{r}(t)$  are required not to be proportional.
